Library	Only 2 more days left to visit a special exhibition of World War 1 artifacts, courtesy of the Canadian War Museum. Every day we will highlight one artifact in the collection, and today that is a service dress jacket. The service dress jacket is a garment made of khaki wool serge cloth. It was the standard uniform jacket worn by British Empire troops throughout the First World War. The same type of jacket was worn on garrison duty as well as on active field service. It was water resistant and anti-flammable, which in the trench warfare provided significant protection to the soldiers wearing it. Stop by the library to try the jacket on!
